The wise little commander, M. le Bost kept his head because he kept himself up on the bridge and kept everybody down from the moment we left Havre till we reached the Company's tock.

Much of the time he stayed away from the dining-room. It was all in the world of Quarantine that prevented him from going mad. At first the passengers, despuiring of getting his ear, began to correspond wit him. They sent him formal, hasty and persussive letters, all of which he neglected to answer. Then they tried verbal messages accompanied by visiting cards, which the middy, the mattre, the commissaire and the surgeon carried with fees of 10 and 20 franc gold pieces for their extreme kindness, and then guess what the reply was?
